Mexican Renaissance

Antique treasures shine against a restrained backdrop.

Produced by ANDREA MILLS | Text by JAIMIE NATHAN

Richly textured woods, burnished metals and antique furniture give this luxurious principal bedroom suite great style and a sense of history. This new approach to Mexican design, by Jorge Almada and Anne-Marie Midy in San Miguel de Allende, references the country's cultural heritage with a light hand. Spare white walls and a modern metal chair are fresh counterpoints to chipped architectural remnants, a metal filigreed lantern, intricate candelabras and a faded fresco. Cool terracotta floor tiles, a staple of Mexican interiors, look sophisticated in a darker hue with the richness of leather. With an inviting writing desk, a serene bed and a clawfoot tub, this multifunctional bedroom is a soothing retreat.

BUILDING BLOCKS

Modern metal chair

An airy frame and unique design create dynamic contrast with traditional antiques.

Casamidy Varenne chair. Iron; rush. $1,950. At South Hill Home.

Textured mirror

A chipped, distressed wood frame lends timeworn character. Idoya mirror by Made Goods. Mango wood. 35" h. x 26" w. $1,000. At Putti Fine Furnishings.

Luxe secretary

A petite desk for letter-writing adds a gracious note to a bedroom.

Hudson Street Mercantile desk. Maple solids; distressed walnut veneer. $1,829. At DeBoer's.

Subdued palette

Rich leather floor tiles contrast with neutral walls, while subtle sea-green accents enliven the space. Leather floor tile in Modena Wine, $11/sq.ft., through Torlys; paint, Rockport Gray (HC-105), Decorators White (CC-20), Harrisburg Green (HC-132), Benjamin Moore.
