"She wanted to keep the house like it was when she grew up—a nice home for her children," says Lynne Scalo, the couple's designer. "But she also wanted to bring a more modern sensibility to the house. We wanted to make it classic for today. What I love is that they didn't do a lot of renovation, except for the kitchen. Most of the house is pretty much the way it was."

The homeowners' art collection—a mixture of Warhols, ancient Chinese sculptures, modern baubles and an assemblage of historical autographed photos—helped set the tone for the interior design. Scalo chose a cool palette with small shots of color here and there.
